An Overlooked Christian Palestinian Aramaic Witness of the "Dormition of Mary" in Codex Climaci Rescriptus (CCR IV)

[Un testigo arameo cristiano-palestinense olvidado de la Dormición de María en el Codex Climaci Rescriptus (CCR IV)]

Abstract: The Codex Climaci Rescriptus (CCR IV) contains a neglected text witness of the Dormition of Mary from the five-book cycle or "palm narrative". It is one of the very early transmissions of this apocryphal text in Christian Palestinian Aramaic (5th/6th century) agreeing in closeness with the very late Ethiopic version of the 18th century.

Keywords: Cairo Genizah; Codex Climaci Rescriptus; Dormition of Mary; History of Peter and Paul; Palm narrative; St Catherine's Monastery.

Resumen: El Codex Climaci Rescriptus (CCR IV) contiene un testigo textual ignorado de la Dormición de María del ciclo de los cinco libros o "narración de la palma". Se trata de una de las primeras transmisiones de este texto apócrifo en arameo cristiano-palestinense (siglos V-VI) en estrecha relación con la versión etiópica tardía del siglo XVIII.

Text Sources

Among the manifold publications on the topic of the Dormition of Mary (Liber requiei) or Departure of Mary (Assumption) in the last two decades an important early text source in Christian Palestinian Aramaic (CPA) has been overlooked, despite having been edited over a hundred years ago. This CPA witness belongs to the famous collective palimpsest manuscript, better known under its upper text name Codex Climaci Rescriptus.¹ It has not been considered so far for the five-book cycle or the "palm narrative" of the Dormition of Mary, probably on account of containing final parts of the apocryphal History of Peter and Paul, which has been known to be integrated so far only in the late Ethiopic transmission. Therefore it was not taken to be part of the Dormition text by Stephen Shoemaker² or earlier by Antoine Wenger³, who only dealt with the Syriac transmissions, and by Victor Arras for his Ethiopic edition⁴ as well as Michel van Esbroeck in his overview article. According to the New Finds in the Monastery of St Catherine, the provenance of this neglected text source in question (CCR IV) is obviously the same, since another missing part of this well-known codex turned up in a blocked-up chamber.6

The two folios of CCR IV are now the fourth text witness next to three new and early ones of the Dormition of Mary in CPA, which were recently published.⁷ Those three derive from two different localities in Egypt, and were discovered between 1890-1896⁸ in the Cairo Genizah, or belong to the New Finds of 1975 in the Monastery of St Catherine, Sinai.⁹ Their original provenances of writing might have been somewhere else, since such writing material (parchment next to being rare was time-consuming to produce) circulated to be often reemployed for new texts.¹⁰ The Dormition manuscript originating from the Cairo Genizah was dismembered for the reuse of a Rabbinic text (Midrash Sifra)¹¹, and the two St Catherine specimens for a later Georgian text, is a ladgari dated to 980.¹²

All four manuscripts can be taken as very early sources dating to the fifth or sixth century and were written by different scribes in varying hands of CPA and are vacillating in their number of lines per

Some examples of such transfers were demonstrated for Georgian palimpsest material by Sebastian P. For this study he assembled all the manuscripts, which were taken from the monastery of Mar Saba near Jerusalem by the famous tenth-century Georgian scribe Iovani Zosimi to St Catherine. It concerns also a number of CPA manuscripts of which only single folios remain, and which are stored today in the National Library of Russia, see Christa Müller-Kessler, "Codex Sinaiticus Rescriptus: A Collection of Christian Palestinian Aramaic Manuscripts", Le Muséon 127 (2014), pp. 263-309, esp. 304 (Appendix).

While the Cairo Genizah fragments (T-S 16.327+T-S AS 78.401, T-S 16.351, T-S NS 258.140)¹³ show a square type of script, the one in CCR IV is very large and elaborate¹⁴, and the two Sinai ones (Georgian NF 19, fol. 4-5; Georgian NF 19, fol. 8-9)¹⁵ are not so accurately executed and are reminiscent of a scribal hand from Mar Saba.¹⁶

This fourth version from CCR IV belonging to the five-book cycle of the Obsequies of My Lady Mary as termed in Syriac or the "palm narrative" as classified by Michel van Esbroeck¹⁷ comprises sections of the last part of the fifth book¹⁸, which relates the encounter of Peter and Paul with an anonymous king of the Cushites (Ethiopians)¹⁹ and Paragmos, the king of Rome (Byzantine) and his daughter Lapita. Only Agnes S. Lewis drew our attention to the fact that the text is similar to a free retold apocryphal story of Peter and Paul in Arabic, which she had published in Horae Semitica IV.²⁰ This, however, did not remain the

Other examples of MSS in CPA originally from the Monastery of Mar Saba in a similar uneven hand under a Georgian text are found in the unique codex St Petersburg, Syr. 16 (CSRPa, f, h, l-n) according to Müller-Kessler, "Codex Sinaiticus Rescriptus", p. 304, which was taken there by Tischendorf together with Codex Sinaiticus. The only photo published can be studied in Jan P. N. Land, Anecdota Syriaca IV (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1875), pl. III. The division into five books is only transmitted in the Ethiopic version. Only once it is noticeable in the CPA version, here in CCR IV, that there is a subdivision between paragraph 121 and 122, which agrees with the Ethiopic division.

The Cushites were already at the time of the composition of the Dormition text ca. in the fourth or fifth century taken as Ethiopians according to the Greek understanding.

only text witness of the History of Peter and Paul being integrated into the five-book cycle of the Dormition of Mary in CPA, since in the meantime another CPA source came to our attention (Sinai, Georgian NF 19, fol. 9), containing paragraphs 108-110.²¹

These are not the only text witnesses containing this story of the "palm narrative", which until recently had just been known from the late Ethiopic transmission. Another early and unpublished Syriac palimpsest fragment from BL, Add 16.445 shows paragraphs 125-128 with Peter and Paul in a dispute with Paragmos. This means for the distribution of the "palm narrative" that not only the Ethiopic text versions included this apocryphal addition in books four and five, but also other Christian groups from Palestine (St Catherine's Monastery) and Egypt (Deir al-Suriyan), the later originally from northern Mesopotamia,²² translated very early the complete five-book cycle. Shoemaker was still of the opinion that it is an independent story integrated into the Liber Requiei on account of the Arabic and Karshuni sources, which show simply the separate History of Peter and Paul, and took it as a late compilation.²³ Both CPA witnesses and partially the Syriac one speak for the closeness and the early background of the late Ethiopic transmission as preserved in one complete manuscript of the 15th century (BL, Or 692, fol. 47r-83v). The CPA versions CP2 (Sinai, Georgian NF 19, fol. 8-9) and CCR IV are even closer to a later one from the 18th century (Paris, BN, d'Abbadie 158, fol. 87r-115v).²⁴

The early CPA text on both parchment leaves of CCR IV is therefore a literal text witness of the late Ethiopic manuscript B from the eighteenth century, as can be understood from the text variants in the critical apparatus in Arras' edition.²⁵ What is a mystery is that a Greek transmission of the five-book cycle is completely missing to date, since only a shortened version of the Dormition is extant.²⁶ Since the CPA versions are always dependent on a Greek "Vorlage", there must have existed a long Greek version comparable to the surviving Ethiopic one from which the Melkite monks drew their translation. A Greek text source obviously circulated, which functioned as a basis for several direct translations into CPA, Ethiopic, and Syriac.²⁷ The Georgian and Coptic witnesses are too scanty to form an opinion of their original "Vorlage". The closeness of the CPA and Ethiopic versions and in many instances also the partially faithful translation of the Syriac witnesses speak for a uniformity of the tradition at least for the five-book cycle in various regions instead of many modifications of the foundational text.

It is noteworthy that only the five-book cycle has survived so far in CPA, since there are yet no traces of the six-book tradition (Bethlehem story) or Departure of Mary, which seems to have been more popular in Syriac (mappqana), ²⁸ as it even surfaced among the Sogdian texts from Turfan. ²⁹ The departure story (six-book cycle) is extant in several nearly complete Syriac manuscripts, ³⁰ while of the See for surviving Greek sources Wenger, L'Assomption de la T. S. Vierge, pp. 210-241. That the Ethiopic text is a close witness of a lost ancient Greek source is also the opinion of Tedros Abraha, "Some Philological Notes on the Mäṣəḥafā '∃räfətä läMaryam 'Liber Requiei' (LR)", Apocrypha 23 (2012), pp. 223-245, esp. 224-226.

Of all Christian traditions the early Syriac versions are the most diverging ones, which is not so clear from what Wright published so far; see William Wright, Contributions to the Apocryphal Literature of the New Testament (London: Williams & Norgate, 1865), pp. 11-15. Reading the Syriac fragments completely, one obtains a different impression of the text tradition and its deviating variants.

Syriac Obsequies (five-book cycle) remained only scanty passages in palimpsest and non-palimpsest form.³¹

The CPA, Syriac, and Ethiopic transmission of the "palm narrative" share some common features, as all three speak of the mythical king Paragmos (prgmws) as the king of Rome (Byzantine), in Ethiopic (parāgmos).³² Prgmws corresponds to brġmws³³ or br'mws³⁴ in the free retold History of Paul and Peter in Arabic, whereas the even remoter Karshuni story does not give him any name.³⁵ Remarkable is that only the CPA text speaks of the king of the Cushites (Ethiopians), which does not correspond to the Ethiopic, which has here the proper name Endān (Endon, Andon) instead.³⁶ Only in the paragraphs 125-126 the CPA and Syriac sources overlap, but both versions diverge quite considerably as much as can be extracted from the Syriac palimpsest fragment.

The text has some new lexical items and expressions: $Prpr' < \pi$ ορφύρα 'purple' § 121; rgz bhm' 'to be deeply furious' § 121.

Noteworthy are the unusual plene spellings with additional yod and aleph: blyhwd 'alone' § 126; mw't' 'hundred' § 121; myl' 'a word' § 125;

This is a mythical king, who was obviously created in the Greek tradition, since the spelling with a P-inversum in CPA represents the Greek letter Pi. The double dots following a letter represent the plural sign (seyamē) and a single dot the superscript dot. In the CPA version CP2 (Georgian NF 19, fol. 9vb18) the name reads Prgws with the omission of mem. Correct there the reading to delwth inn mṣyh:yn we'y' kr' Pr'gws' dlyt klwm tmyr mn 'b:dyk: '..., since to You we shout. And Prgws will know that nothing is hidden from Your servants.' ³⁶ Other variants are Endon and Andon.

my:nk 'than yours' § 121; tyly 'hanging' § 125; wyr:ymwn 'and they shall throw' § 121.³⁷

Scribal oddities: plqy' < φυλακή 'prison' § 121, cf. pylq'. § 126; 'tyt 'she brought' for *'ytt. § 126.

There are several cases of omission and other scribal slips to be noted, which are indicated in the text and in the footnotes. The Ethiopic parallel can sometimes help to verify the textual understanding.

The significance of this overlooked witness of the Dormition of Mary from the Codex Climaci Rescriptus with the other three versions in CPA, and with the mainly two unpublished Syriac palimpsest manuscripts from the British Library is that they open a new chapter on the issue of its transmission in Palestine, Egypt, and Mesopotamia for this Marian apocryphal text. It means that the only until then known and complete Ethiopic witness has to be studied and evaluated in a different light from now on.

The sequence of the under text in CPA differs from the upper text of the Codex Climaci Rescriptus in Syriac, which is caused by the reuse.

The beginning in the right hand column in fol. 14r is not part of the Dormition of Mary, although all three texts in CCR IV obviously derive from an anthology of patristic texts judging by the identical scribal hand.

Literally 'split my heart'.

^{...} agrees with Eth BC.

Eth B and C add 'cursed is everyone who will speak ill against you'.

Lewis, CCR, p. 192: 't'.

Lewis, CCR, 192 emendates to d'ḥwt, but dtḥwt is correct, since the verb refers to preceding mlkwth 'his kingdom' in l. 2; cf. the Eth parallel.

Lewis, CCR, p. 192: "mr". The verbal form '.sḥr shows here a spelling with an assimilated taw, see Müller-Kessler, Grammatik, p. 164.

12.	mšmš ytkwn :.	will serve you.'	brth wmll	daughter and spoke

Lewis, CCR, p. 192: šl'm. There is definitely something missing after mn, cf. Eth has 'from this torture'.
 Lewis, CCR, p. 192: hlyn.
 Lewis, CCR, p. 192: tktry.
 Lewis, CCR, p. 192: tr:ty'sryn.

Lewis, CCR, p. 190: bhwn. Lewis, CCR, p. 190:'ymm'.

⁸⁰ Lewis, CCR, p. 190: btyly'.

Lewis, CCR, p. 190: 'tt. The verb should read here 'tlyt according to the Eth 'and she was not suspended'. The whole text passage is difficult and deviates from the Ethiopic. There is obviously something missing before lbdyl.

Lewis, CCR, p. 190: 'nt; correct Müller-Kessler, Grammatik, p. 67.

Lewis, CCR, p. 190: bšywlm.

Scribe omitted here either tr''door' or m'wl 'entrance'; cf. Eth 'afa 'entrance'.

⁸⁵ Eth. Gehenna [gahannam].

Eth. Gehenna [ganannam].
 ... agrees with Eth BC.
 Lewis, CCR, p. 190: lkyt'. The proper name of the daughter reads lpyt' instead of lkyt'. lpyt' has a negative meaning in Greek.
 The Arabic version has lwhyt Lūḥūth, see Lewis, Acta Mythologica Apostolorum, pp. 158, 162 (Arabic); pp. 185, 188-189 (English).
 Lewis, CCR, p. 190: qlms. The letter waw was added as superscript.
